MYSTERY FOR THE POLICE.

Left Her Home to Attend Meeting and Discovered Hours Later Apparently Dying in Tough Section of the City.

(Special to The Evening World.) WATERBURY, Conn., May 12.—Mar-garet Crane, thirty-five years old, well known in church circles, was found with her skull crushed to-day in a section of city frequented by the tough elestreet last night to attend a meeting of a benevolent organization of which she is a member. She did not appear there shortly before dawn was discovered lying in a hallway with her head en in and her clothing almost torn from her. Nobody has been found who heard and called upon them to rise. saw her attacked and police have a mystery to solve. Her pocketbook has not been found and it is thought robbery was the motive for the crime. The victim is in the hospital, but the doctors say she cannot live.

Chief of Police Egan, of Waterbury, told The Evening World over the long-distance telephone this afternoon that thus far he and his men were at sea so far as the facts of the assault on Mies Crane were concerned.

"We are hard at work on the case and hope to have something definite before many shours," he said. "The family is exceedingly reticent, but from all that I have been able to learn I am inclined to think that the first reports sent out concerning the young woman's injuries mere somewhat exaggerated. She is seriously injured, it is true, but not to the extent generally supposed."

Richard Henry Stoddard, the last of the class of authors that included Lowell, Hawthorne and Irving, was born in Hingham, Mass., on Juny 2, 1825. When very young, his mother being a widow, he was taken to Boston to live. He remained there a few years, struggling with poverty, and then moved to New York.

Mr. Stoddard's first employment was an apprenticeship to an iron moulder. He in turn became a lawyer's clerk, a reporter and a bookkeeper. He again went back to the iron moulder, and spent his spare hours in reading and studying poetry. His first volume of poems, entitled "Footprints," was published in 1848.

Mr. Stoddard married Elizabeth Barstow, a poet and novelist, in 1859. He was a member of the Authors' Glub, Authors' Society and Century Association.

GUARDING THE DYNAMITE. A foreman in charge of the Subway work said to-day:

"We have a few men at work and a lot of special watchmen. We are patrolling the Subway night and day to see that nothing happens. The patience of the police has been tried by the strike. The men have been kept on reserve to quell any outbreak. They are tired of the extra duty forced upon them by the strike and the probability of trouble, and if there is to be trouble they want it quickly and want it over with.

A meeting of the striking Subway laborers was held before 7 o'clock this morning in their headquarters, No. 2229 First avenue, at which the men were addressed by Vito Pacelli, President of their organization. Pacelli explained to them that they had until to-morrow to return to work. He said that all those who were in favor of returning to work would be

BUILDERS AND THEIR MEN IN A FINISH FIGHT.

Not in a generation has the situation between capital and labor been so fraught with danger as it is to-day. On one side at present is lined up all the men engaged in building, whose capital is invested in contracts amounting to millions. They are organizing to resist the demands of labor and sympathetic strikes growing out of labor troubles. The capital of the men and corporations on the one side is $500,000,000. Opposed to this aggregation of wealth, this employers' union or trust, is the union of the men.

In a few days there may be a lockout of scores of thousands of men in the building trades who carry a union card. The present situation, so far as the building trades strike is concerned, grows out of a strike by the drivers of material wagons. The men presented demands to the employers and they were refused. The lumbermen's association, an organization of dealers in materials, refused these demands, and other dealers did the same. MANCHURIA OPEN INDEPENDENTS COULD NOT GET ALONG.

At first it was expected that independent concerns which acceded to the lemands of the teamsters would be in a position to supply the demand of the market and building operations would not be hampered. The fallacy of this argument was shown when the great contractors decided to throw their lot with that of the lumbermen and not use material offered to them by the half dozen concerns not in the association. The next move was when outside dealers refused to take advantage of the opening in New York and refused to ship material to this city in competition with the men in the home

This army of labor, having within its ranks the organized artisans of the city, had on its hands at the time of the tie-up several small strikes. They have added to the complications. MATERIAL DEALERS IN IT. TOO.

To the support of the lumber dealers and to other men in the material trade have come the men who buy material. They propose to stand by the material men and as a unit fight the army of labor. The result at present is a paralysis of the building industry. The millions of the builders are idle. RAN FOR MANY BLOCKS.

B. F. Payne, a wealthy horse owner and member of the Westchester Racing Association, owes his life to the heroist and agility of Bleycle Policeman John Hanell, of the Tremont station.

While Mr. Payne and his driver were chestnut horse became unmanageable and bolted opposite St. John's College. Hanell, who turned in behind, raced along until his bicycle was abreast of the horse. Then, leaping from the whe !! he seized the bridle and hung on until the frightened animal stopped.

Mr. Payne, who was injured some tim ago, had one of his legs in a plaster cast. He started from his home to drive to the Morris Park race track. He took his driver with him, as he is not yet able to hold in his favorite horse, a chestnu

Horse Took Fright.

They were driving along the Peiham Parkway at a rapid pace when the horse suddenly took fright at a piece of paper in the road, and elinching the bit in his teeth dashed down the avenue. The driver bent all his weight on the reins, but was unable to check the frightened animal. The frail racing rehicle swerved from side to side so that both men had to abandon the reins and hold on to the sides to save themselves from being thrown out on the jagged rocks at the roadside.

As the runaway neared St. John's College, Bicycle Policeman Hanell, whose attention had been attracted by cries of pedestrians, spurted from narrow street into the Pelham road just as Mr. Payne's vehicle flashed by Bearing down on the pedals he exerted all his strength to overtake the runa way. The horse had a good start, and several blocks were passed before Hanell acquired sufficient mometum to gain. Then he began to close in on the phaeton inch by inch.

Both Weak from Fatigue. Both Mr. Payne and his driver wer beginning to loosen their hold on the sides of the wagon from sheer fatigue when the policeman slowly and silently drew alongside. Hanell only waited to advance a few feet before the horse's head, when he leaped from his wheel and grasped the bridle reins. He is heavy man and his weight soon told on the horse, who gradually slowed down. As the horse came to a stop, however, the wagon tilted over and Mr. Payne and the driver were tumbled into the road. The plaster cast was broken from Mr. Payne's leg, but he was not otherwise injured, and after the horse had been quieted he drove on
